World Premiere of Harry Putter and the Sorcerer's Phone

Minneapolis, MN. April 4, 2007 – Harry Putter and the Sorcerer's Phone is the first in a series of independently produced comedic shorts which parody the Harry Potter stories by JK Rowling and associated Warner Bros. films. Harry Putter and the Sorcerer's Phone will premiere at 7:00 P.M. on May 4, 2007, at the Minnehaha Academy Theater, 3100 West River Parkway, Minneapolis, MN. Admission is free. Following the 15 minute screening, cast and crew will be available for a Meet & Greet.

Harry Putter and the Sorcerer's Phone is a mockumentary with interviews and stories about the "real" boy, Harry Putter, upon whom JK Rowling based her famous books and movies. As Putter explains, Rowling (and Hollywood) took a lot of literary license and changed or omitted many of the actual facts about his life for "artistic" purposes. Harry now intends to set the record straight in this revealing and honest documentary about what really happened in his life.

Jeremy Gustafson, writer and director of Harry Putter and the Sorcerer's Phone, is a graduate of Minnehaha Academy and currently attends St. Olaf College in Northfield, MN. This is Gustafson's first major film project as director. The film was produced by Minnesota born Matthew Feeney (www.matthewfeeney.com) and features local actors Nathan Shrake, Christina Holaday, and Erik Skramstad.
